2. Citations and explanations (Rule 70.7)

Amended claims 1-18 were filed on 30 June 2004.

Documents considered being of particular relevance:

D1 US 5685892

The object of the invention is to feed anode scrap into a smelting reactor in a manner that the anodes do not cause damage to the reactor linings. The anodes are bent to a certain radius of curvature, so that when they are fed they meet the metal surface in an essentially horizontal position.

D1 (column 5, lines 24-32; column 8, lines 6-12) discloses that anodes are bent prior to being fed to a smelting furnace in order to prevent impingement directly upon the furnace bottom. However, D1 does not show or indicate in any way that the anodes are bent to a certain radius of curvature as stated in claims 1 and 14 of the application. Consequently, the invention as claimed is novel.

The stated difference implies improvements in reducing the damage to the lining of a furnace when charging anodes. The centre of gravity for the anodes is shifted which affects the dropping behaviour in a favourable way. Therefore, the invention as defined by claims 1-18 is considered to involve an inventive step and also to fulfil the criteria of industrial applicability.
